TIPS TO KEEP IN MIND

Remember, while this guide offers specific strategies for each hole, certain principles apply across the entire course. Keep these universal tips in mind to enhance your overall game and enjoy your round:

- The ball is round for a reason. Play to let it roll out. Utilize the natural contours of the course to maximize your distance and positioning. Don't be afraid to let your ball run.
- Allow gravity to be your partner. The course is designed with subtle slopes and undulations. Trust these features to guide your ball, and you'll often find yourself in better positions.
- It's not as scary as it looks. Like most great designs, most of the challenge is between your ears. Approach each shot with confidence and a clear mind. The course's visual challenges can be more daunting than the actual physical obstacles. Trust your abilities and enjoy the mental game.

More than anything, enjoy your round!

This hole looks demanding, but it really just wants you to pick a smart line, trust the slope, and not force anything. Aim toward the two far-right bunkers off the tee – that’s the clearest visual and the widest landing area. If your ball finishes on the left half of the fairway, the ground will usually give you some extra run.

The approach plays longer than it looks. The green sits up and has a real false front, so gravity is your enemy here. Anything landing short will roll back off. Take the extra club, fly it onto the surface, and aim to land past the middle so the ball stays put.

PAR 5

508

This hole asks for restraint, not bravery. A fairway wood or long iron aimed just right of the evergreen is ideal. If you crest the hill, the slope will feed the ball down into a great position without you needing to do anything special.

The green slopes left to right and has a deceptive false front on the right. Favor the high side and make sure you carry the ball fully onto the surface. Short shots come back farther than you expect, and recoveries here get awkward quickly.

2

450

The key on this hole is starting the ball on the right line. Aim at the large tree on the right or the left edge of the right fairway bunker. The fairway tilts hard right-to-left and will bring the ball back toward the center if you let it. The ball is round for a reason.

Position matters on the approach. Shots from the right half of the fairway open up the green. Everything on the putting surface moves right-to-left, so favor the high side to let it feed to the hole.

3

PAR 4

416

A beautiful downhill par 3 that usually plays a club less. Wind is a real factor here, so take a moment before choosing your club.

The smartest play is landing the ball short of the green and letting the slope feed it on. Shots flown directly onto the surface often bound through and leave difficult recoveries. Let the land do the work — that's what it wants here.

4

210

One of the more demanding par 4s on the course, and patience pays. Favor the left half of the fairway and resist the urge to chase distance. Getting too far down the hill only makes the second shot harder.

From the plateau, let the approach use the natural contour. Shots landing short and slightly left will often get a friendly bounce toward the putting surface. Trust that and don't force it.

PAR 4

Upper tee deck

This hole gives you a big target, but it still wants precision. The prevailing wind often helps, so know your number and trust it.

Landing the ball on the front portion of the green is ideal. Shots struck too firmly can release over the back. Putting from below the hole is the goal here, so don't chase a perfect number — chase a smart one.

PAR 5

683

The longest hole on the course starts uphill, which adds more bite than it looks like. Favor right-center off the tee and let the slope bring the ball back into the fairway.

After that, this hole becomes a three-shot puzzle. Hit it hard enough to use the downslope on your layup and gravity helps you. Landing the ball short and letting it feed down is the simplest way to solve it.

By the way, this green is enormous. Pay attention to the hole location.

Park back right of green

The tee shot is semi-blind, but there's plenty of room. Trust the alignment posts, commit to the swing, and don't steer it.

The approach demands discipline. The green falls sharply left with a steep runoff. Favor the high side and accept a longer putt — missing low turns this hole into a recovery challenge very quickly.

PAR 4

477

10th Tees  Park back left of green

The fairway looks generous, but aggressive lines narrow fast. Pick a sensible start line left of the bunkers and keep the ball in play.

The boomerang green is wild. The single rule here is don't be short. Anything landing short will roll back, while shots carried fully onto the surface at least give you a chance to manage the putt.

9

438

Take a moment to enjoy the view, then refocus. With the elevation drop, this hole often plays a club less, but wind can change that quickly.

Pin-high is rewarded here. Misses long or short bring real difficulty, so distance control matters more than attacking the flag.

This hole presents a clear choice off the tee. A safe line to the middle of the fairway leaves a longer but level second shot. A bolder line over the left can catch the slope and add significant distance, but misses are punished.

The approach is uphill and the false front is real. Take extra club and commit fully – anything short will come back.

11

PAR 4

488

A small par 3 with big consequences. It usually plays a half-club longer than the number.

The green is clearly tiered. Pick the section you want and land the ball there. Being on the wrong tier turns a reasonable putt into a defensive exercise.

12

126

This hole looks welcoming, but placement is critical. Favor the left side off the tee to open the angle into the green.

The approach plays uphill to a green with a false front. Gravity - and often, the wind - works against you here, so take enough club to carry the ball fully onto the surface. Miss right and recovery becomes difficult quickly.

15

365

A demanding tee shot with a blind landing, but the fairway is wider than it looks. Trust the alignment posts, commit to your line, and swing freely. If you're unsure, hammer it farther right than you might think and that usually works.

The approach plays downhill and shorter than the number. Land the ball past the crest and let the hill feed it onto the green. Trying to force it hole-high usually works against you.

Often into the wind, so control matters more than power. Aim toward the left edge of the green complex and let the fairway slope feed the ball right.

The green releases from front to back. Slightly short of hole-high is ideal — long shots run away quickly.

A strong finishing hole that rewards discipline. The fairway slopes left-to-right, so starting the ball on the left lets the ground bring it back to center.

The green is shallow, making precision essential. The center of the surface is always a good result here. Finish smart and enjoy the walk in.
